Understanding the Benefit

If an accident, a serious illness, or a cognitive impairment prevented you or a loved one from being able to perform what were once normal activities of daily life, you may find yourself in a situation that requires long-term care services. Long-term care insurance will provide coverage for care received in an assisted living facility, a nursing home or even in your own home should you need assistance with two out of the six Activities of Daily Living or become cognitively impaired.

70% of Americans over the age of 65, on average, will require at least some type of long-term care services during their lifetime.³

No one likes to imagine themselves in need of long-term care; however, in an otherwise very difficult situation, having a long-term care insurance policy can mean maintaining a quality of life without the enormous financial burden or the need to rely on loved ones to provide care.
