Art Majors at George Fox

As an art major at George Fox, you will get the chance to develop your artistic gifts and find a curriculum that cultivates that talent and prepares you for your chosen path – whether you plan to pursue a career as a practicing artist or, after graduate work, as an educator at the secondary or college level. You choose your concentration – in either graphic design or studio art – or you can opt for an interdisciplinary major that combines art with another field of study.

Art majors concentrating in studio arts can specialize in painting, ceramics, drawing, photography, mixed media or printmaking. For those interested in graphic arts, George Fox provides a solid foundation, including hands-on classes with industry-standard software. We also feature a ceramics and sculpture facility that allows students to explore pottery and various sculpture mediums. Seniors have the opportunity to set up their own studio space in the art annex, and there is access to an anagama kiln where students get to practice the ancient process of wood-firing ceramics.

Our art major students also have opportunities to work with distinguished guest artists from the Northwest and around the country.

Concentrations: Studio Arts or Graphic Design
