

Mark W. Brazo, EdD

Adjunct Faculty

Email: mbrazo@georgefox.edu

After my undergraduate work at UC Irvine, I remained there for a year of grad school in education, moving to Oregon in the fall of 1977 to become a secondary teacher. While continuing my high school teaching in Portland, I embarked upon teaching graduate students in 2003 in the George Fox University School of Education, concluding this phase of my graduate school teaching at the end of the fall semester of 2009.

Then in the summer of 2010, I began teaching as an adjunct in the GFU Department of Professional Studies...this is where I currently teach.

Academic Background

- EdD, George Fox University
- MEd, George Fox University
- MA, Institute for Creation Research
- BS, Biology, & BS, Chemistry, University of California, Irvine

Expertise and Interests

My academic focus is on mathematics and the sciences...both physical and life.

Outside the Classroom

My wife and I love to travel. When our three children were growing up, the five of us had incredible and memorable summer vacations together. Now that our children are adults and leading their own lives, my wife and I still travel as often as we can, which is now facilitated by the fact that after 38 years of teaching high school, I retired in June of 2016.
