In 2016, I became an adjunct teacher at George Fox. My appreciation for the mission of this fine institution began when I enrolled as a student in 2004, following my deployment to Iraqi Freedom. It was the first step in launching my goals of a second career, following my retirement from the United States Air Force in 2012.

In each of our lives, we need to find ways to exercise the gifts that Christ gave us, and mine simply reaches clarity when I think of teaching. I love the classroom interaction, the discussion of new ideas, as well as the reward in seeing the concepts of knowledge transferred. It is an inherent and internally rewarding experience that is often difficult to describe.

My passion for teaching lies with project management, business management, data decisions, change management, strategy and any aspect of business that makes the world a better place to live and work in.

Academic Background

- MBA, George Fox University (2008)
- BS, Management and Organizational Leadership, George Fox University (2006)
- BS, Project Management, George Fox University (2006)

Expertise

As a business consultant, professionally, my expertise lies in project management, operations management, process definition and improvement, strategic planning, as well as change management. Helping companies take their strategic initiatives and execute them into tactical, operational goals is an extremely rewarding process to be a part of. Through efforts combined with project and change management, as well as lean and agile approaches to a rapid cycle workplace, keeps the world of business vibrant, entertaining, challenging and rewarding, all tied into a single neat package.

Primary Teaching Responsibilities

- MGOL 412 – Data Informed Decision Making I
- MGOL 415 – Data Informed Decision Making II
- MGOL 431 – Operations Management

Outside the Classroom

You might find me shooting photographs, video, or drone video, hiking, camping, cycling or playing on Mt. Hood or the beach. My wonderful wife and two children, coupled with the connection and volunteering at our church, are what ground me, give me purpose, and answer my “why” God created me and placed me here on earth.

I enjoy all of my academic relationships garnered from teaching, and remain connected with many students on LinkedIn or through social monthly events.
