

Lauren DeLuca, MA

Adjunct Faculty

Email: ldeluca@georgefox.edu

I joined George Fox University Department of Professional Studies in 2018. As a first-generation college graduate, I am passionate about helping students succeed throughout their academic journeys. I am so thankful to be an adjunct writing instructor at George Fox because I firmly believe in the promise that each student will be known. I want students to enter the Adult Degree Program with the confidence that he/she will be understood, valued, encouraged, and uplifted.

Writing about personal or work-related life experiences is one of the best ways to learn and grow. With that said, I encourage students to immediately apply the new writing techniques and communication methods we practice in class the very next day.

Expertise and Interests

I knew I wanted to write and teach writing at a young age, but for a long time, I did not think I would have the opportunity to attend college and achieve this goal. After researching alternatives, God faithfully answered my prayers and my academic journey began! As an undergraduate student, I pursued writing opportunities by serving as a tutor on campus where I co-lead class discussions and met with students individually to review their writing assignments. I soon realized that I was drawn to adult-focused learning environments, so I continued on to graduate school and began teaching community college and university-level writing courses. My writing experience also extends beyond the classroom and into the business world as I have spent 5+ years as a proposal writer and content developer.

Outside the Classroom

When I am at home, I spend my time reading, writing, and cooking. Fun fact: I'd love to write a cookbook one day! My husband and I also enjoy soccer (go Timbers), and we try to travel to an away game each year. We both value our time with family and friends with whom we often go hiking and camping. Oregon is such a beautiful state. Between the mountains, rivers, and coastline, we never get tired of exploring God's creation.
