I've been leading a world-class team at Nike the past four years on the forefront of developing new and innovative manufacturing capabilities. In my 23 years of leading technical advancements in manufacturing, supply chain, and new product innovation, my passion for enabling what's next never ceases. I believe the programs offered in the Department of Professional Studies give students an edge with the most in-demand skills and provide them the confidence to compete at a higher level to achieve their career aspirations. Managing complex projects is a highly sought-after talent in the market today, whether it be at small startups or Fortune 500 companies. It's exciting for me to be involved in what's happening at George Fox and have the opportunity to teach these methods and concepts in a way that brings today's challenges into the classroom.

Academic Background

- MSc, Graphics Systems Management, Rochester Institute of Technology
- BFA, Advertising/Fashion Photography, Rochester Institute of Technology

Expertise and Interests

My career started in professional photography in New York City, freelancing as an assistant with clients like GQ, Harper's Bazaar, Travel + Leisure, and Vogue. Later, my work appeared in Elle Décor and L'uomo Vogue before I left New York City to pursue graduate studies in printing. After graduate school, I worked for Hallmark Cards for over 19 years in technical, quality, and project management roles before joining Nike. Having received my PMP and PMI-ACP certifications, putting them to practice in my current role is constantly rewarding.

Primary Teaching Responsibilities

- MPJM 419 – Agile Project Management Methodologies

Outside the Classroom

My wife, three children, and I enjoy the Pacific Northwest outdoors, camping, hiking, and kayaking in between many school sports. We are also big fans of the Trailblazers and Timbers, but still cheer on the KC Chiefs! Outside of sports and recreation, I lead a local Awana's children's ministry, as well as volunteer for the local Project Management Institute (PMI) chapter as their Corporate Outreach Director. Volunteering allows me to stay in touch with project managers in our community, assisting them with access to training, development, and mentoring opportunities for their companies.
