Finding a Way to Help

Responses range from prayer to visits to New York City

Backpack by his side, a George Fox University student — knees and elbows on the floor — was nearly prostrate in prayer in the aisle of Bauman Auditorium on Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The unidentified student perhaps best symbolizes the university community's reaction to the enormity of the tragic events that shocked America and the world that morning. A front-page picture of the deeply prayerful blond-haired student was published the next day in the Newberg Graphic under the banner headline: "A Faraway Tragedy Hits Close to Home.

While the connection between New York City, Washington, D.C., and Newberg might seem somewhat tenuous, there were direct ties and consequences as individuals on the campus reacted to the terrorist attacks on American soil and spirit.

George Fox's Herbert Hoover Distinguished Professor Mark Hatfield, nationally respected as a statesman, termed the terrorist onslaught "one of the most significant hinge events in all of history."

The deliberate crashes of airplanes into the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York City, and the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., had an immediate campus impact when television and radio broadcasts delivered the news shortly before 7 a.m. PST.

Ongoing reports could be heard in the background as about 30 students and staff gathered in the University's Bruin Den about 8:30 a.m. for collective prayer. The gathering was a spontaneous sharing together suggested on the campus e-mail system.

Campus Pastor Gregg Lamm shortly thereafter posted a separate e-mail announcing that Bauman Auditorium would be open throughout the day for individual or group prayers. Two sched-
A New Look for the University Web Site

The new site will help build visibility for the many different parts of George Fox University

I t's address hasn't changed, but George Fox has put on a new “face,” of sorts, for those who want to get a closer look at the University through the window of cyberspace.

On Oct. 12 the University’s new Web site was launched at www.georgefox.edu. The new site is the result of months of planning both inside and outside the University.

In close consultation with George Fox administration, an Indiana company recognized as one of the best nationally for university Web site development spearheaded the revamping and expansion of George Fox’s public Internet presence.

Brainstorm Design of Indianapolis developed a design and site structure by last May, and spent the sum-der creating content in preparation for the site’s inauguration.

The University’s nine-member Web Development Committee selected the company from among several national firms. Members noted that Brainstorm is a highly respected firm that has done work for several other Christian colleges, including Anderson University in Indiana and Cornerstone University in Michigan.

“Brainstorm Design’s work has been ranked in the top 100 by among the 100 best college and university Web sites,” noted the Missouri-based National Research Center for College and University Admissions.

“I’m excited about this,” says Andrea Cook, vice president for enrollment services at George Fox and a member of the committee. “I feel it’s been desperately needed for a long time. The Web is such an important medium to reach our public audiences.”

Like the previous Web site, the new site covers such basics as a summary of information about the University, a message from the president, details on academic programs and athletics, a calendar, faculty and staff listings, an alumni section, updated information on news events and activities, and a roster of offices and services.

The new site also introduces a section specifically for parents of current or prospective students. That section includes listings of parent services and events, information about George Fox’s Parents’ Council, and connections to Web sites for the various newspapers serving the Oregon and Idaho communities where George Fox has programs.

As part of the redesign, the new site utilizes technology on the home page that allows animated graphics. Through it, a series of 20 vignettes will be displayed in random groups of six. These will include photos and quotations from various representatives of the George Fox community, such as current undergraduate students, alumni, adult students, and faculty members.

The new design seeks to give George Fox a consistent “look” on the Web, and also gives all offices and departments the capability of being part of the site as well. That is made possible through special software called “Web Twid” that lets the various offices set up and maintain their own pages, but in a way that keeps a cohesive look to the overall site.

“Those people who ‘own’ the content will be the ones to manage it,” says Cook.

Local coordination of the site is handled by Gloria Foltz, a member of George Fox’s Institutional Technology staff. She serves as a liaison between the University and Brainstorm Design. She also trains people from each George Fox office to set up their own departmental pages on the Web site.

Cook says one of the big challenges in developing the new Web site was to reflect the growth and diversity of the University.

“We’re complex,” she says. “We’re not just one thing. And it’s all going to be up there.”

An Important Time to Be Who We Are

The United States has incurred terrorist attacks before, but not on our soil. Just three years ago, two embassies in East Africa were destroyed with significant loss of both African and American lives. Now — with the Sept. 11 ter-riost attacks — such activity has come home with greater ferocity than ever.

Two students from Daystar University in Nairobi, Kenya, are studying at George Fox University this semester. I recently heard of one of them (Moses) tell how he was at the U.S. embassy in Nairobi the day before it was bombed. If he had decided to care of his business there one day later, he might well have been a victim of that terrorism.

This story sounds so much like the stories we have heard these past weeks from New York and Washington, D.C., about the terrorist attacks there. Some seem to be spared, while others lose their lives — apparently by chance. The stories of heroism are heartwarming, but sometimes very sad.

Our country and our world have been permanently changed by the events of Sept. 11, 2001. Much of the change is spiritual in nature. Prayer has become good and acceptable in places it hasn’t been for some time. God has invaded many conversations where it might have been a poke before that fateful day.

What is the role of the Christ-centered university in such a new world and in this new context? At many meetings of higher educational institutions, George Fox is “different.” Usually emended, if possible. While all institutions in our athletic conference have Christian roots, most of them prefer just not to talk about it.

At a recent meeting, the conference commissioner suggested that “it was inappropriate that we meet at this Quaker school.” His implication was that maybe we have something of value to say when most people were not sure where to turn.

Our culture is giving us a positive opportunity to speak to our distinctive as it has not done for a long time. My hope is that all George Fox personnel — faculty, administrators, staff, and students — will use such opportunities with wisdom and grace.
Great School, Great Price
George Fox is in the top tier of the U.S. News & World Report rankings even with a change in classification to schools with graduate programs.

George Fox University has made a leap from the best of the small guys to among the top in its new category in the newest rankings of "America's Best Colleges" by U.S. News & World Report.

The highly publicized national rankings in the magazine’s Sept. 17 issue put George Fox in the top tier in the new category of Best Universities — Master's, West Region.

And George Fox is listed in the category of “Great Schools at Great Prices,” ranked eighth in the West.

Of 128 colleges and universities in the West category, George Fox is listed 17th overall, among just 33 ranked in the top tier. Of the 155 colleges and universities nationwide moved into the new “Universities, Master's” category, just 10— or 12 percent — made it into the top tier rankings.

"As we strive to satisfy, once again, to be recognized by U.S. News & World Report as an institution of high quality in the West region," said George Fox President David Brandt. "The rankings are particularly significant this year in light of the realignment of institutional categories. George Fox is now being compared with other universities that provide a full range of undergraduate and master's-level programs. We believe this reflects our continuing growth in both number and quality of our academic programs."

George Fox is one of 200 universities in the nation that were switched in U.S. News ranking categories as a result of the changes made in the Carnegie classification of institutions of higher education.

The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in late 2000 issued an updated version of its classification, a grouping system that U.S. News uses as the basis for its ranking categories. The Carnegie system is the most widely accepted system for classifying American colleges and universities. George Fox is now listed as a Master's (Comprehensive Colleges) and Universities I, moving from Baccalaureate Colleges II.

In the new U.S. News grouping, George Fox joins 572 other universities that offer master’s degree programs but few, if any, doctoral programs.

George Fox now is in the category that includes several other Oregon schools: the University of Portland (7th), Pacific University (16th), and Marylhurst (27th).

In determining its rankings, U.S. News surveys all colleges, with a 94 percent response rate. The rankings consider seven factors and are weighted by academic reputation (25 percent), graduation and retention rates (25 percent), faculty resources (20 percent), student selectivity (15 percent), financial resources (10 percent), and alumni giving (5 percent).

The Best Values listing by the magazine relates a school’s academic quality, as indicated by its overall ranking, with the net cost of attendance for a student who receives the average level of financial aid.

"The higher the quality of the school’s academic program and the lower the cost to the student, the better the deal," states the magazine in its rankings.

George Fox, at eighth in the Best Values category, is one of three Oregon schools in the West category, with Pacific University second and the University of Portland 11th.

— Barry Hubbell

Dixon Named 2001-02 Peace Scholar
The George Fox University administrator will write a book on race and reconciliation

Daryl Dixon, director of multicultural services for George Fox, has been named Peace Scholar for the 2001-02 academic year by the University’s Center for Peace Learning. This is the first year that the Peace Scholar is an administrator rather than a faculty member.

Since 1996, the University has annually appointed a Peace Scholar, with the intent to allow a faculty or staff member to spend the equivalent of one course load working on a project dealing with the issue of peace. Applicants must present a project proposal that will have permanent value, whether through publishing, recording, or other means. Applications are judged on the faculty or staff member’s ability to fulfill the proposed project, as well as the project’s potential quality and impact on peace efforts.

Dixon’s project is to create a bibli cal- ly based daily devotional book on the issue of race and reconciliation. Topics will look at race, religion, gender, and relational issues. The target readership for this book will include Christians, anyone who has a broken relationship, or who simply has a heart for reconciliation.

Ron Mock, the director of the Center for Peace Studies, said Dixon’s project will reach an important readership with a timely message.

Dixon lives in Milwaukie, Ore., and holds a master of divinity degree from George Fox Evangelical Seminary. He serves on diversity, Affirmative Action, and racial reconciliation committees in the Portland area. He is the founding pastor of a Portland-area church.

Dixon hopes the book will equip individuals with biblical tools for reconciliation. He also desires that the hearts and minds of those who read it will become a bit more loving, compassionate, and understanding.

"Reconciliation is a personal interest, a passion of mine," said Dixon. "God has given us the ministry of reconciliation to anyone who claims to be a Christian."

Previous Peace Scholars include Tom Head, professor of economics, who focused on the international economies of peace and war; Doug Campbell, professor of art, who created artwork on the subject of peace; Bill Jolliff, professor of English, who recorded music for children titled “Love All Around This World”; Paul Anderson, associate professor of biblical and Quaker studies, who analyzed the writings of St. John that related to peace; and Bill Vermillion, former dean of the University’s seminary, who focused on conflict resolution in the church.

University adjusts to slowing growth
George Fox University has experienced its 14th year of enrollment increases with a record high 2,648 students registered for fall classes — nine more total students than last fall’s 2,639.

While the total number is up, the number of credit hours those students are taking is lower. This year, for example, there are 41 more graduate students than last fall. But the programs that experienced growth were, for example, M.Ed. and Ed.D., which enroll full-time teachers who take lower academic loads in the fall.

Also lower is the number of traditional undergraduate students, despite the fact that there were 59 more returning students than last year. The high retention rate of 83.5 percent from freshman to sophomore year did not offset the smaller incoming class.

The slowing of enrollment growth is a relatively new experience for George Fox, which has quadrupled in size in the last 15 years. Since the working budget for the University for the next fiscal year is set in the spring, adjustments needed to be made when the full-time equivalent enrollment projections were not met.

President David Brandt, in conjunction with the board of trustees, determined the budget must be balanced. This was done through reductions in program expenditures as well as a reduction in workforce.

As a result, 21 positions were eliminated across the University from an employment force of about 400. This included the laying off of 16 employees.

In this repositioning, some services will be reduced. Further reorganization or job elimination for the current academic year is not anticipated.

“George Fox University has a great legacy of growth due to innovation and entrepreneurial behavior,” said Brandt. “I am counting on such activity continuing to bring us to an improved level of financial strength. Please continue to pray for the mission and well-being of George Fox University and all the persons connected with this institution.”

Daryl Dixon, George Fox’s director of multicultural services and 2001-02 Peace Scholar, hopes that the hearts and minds of those who read his book will become a bit more loving, compassionate, and understanding.
New vice president, seminary dean join George Fox

George Fox University filled two key administrative roles with the hiring of G. Michael Goins as vice president for financial affairs and Jules Glanzer as dean of George Fox Evangelical Seminary.

Goins joined the University in July, replacing Don Millage, who retired in his 30th year at George Fox. A financial officer with 28 years experience at three colleges in other states, Goins previously was vice president for finance and treasurer at Westminster College.

He is a graduate of Whitworth College in Spokane, Wash., and has family ties to George Fox: his father, Paul, was a Friends pastor who served on the board of trustees; his sister Deborah is a 1975 graduate; and his brother Doug directed the George Fox food service in the late 1960s.

Goins was part of three visiting accreditation teams for the Western Association of Schools and Colleges and served for three years on the advisory council for the Educational Insurance Independent Association Inc.

Glanzer assumed his responsibilities as dean of the seminary in October. He replaced Thomas Johnson, dean since 1997, who chose to devote all his time to teaching.

Glanzer holds a doctor of ministry degree in leadership and church management from Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, Calif. He was an adjunct professor of leadership studies at Houston Graduate School of Theology and directed a Houston program focusing on faith-based leadership development. He also has experience as a marketing and sales manager.

Ordained in a Mennonite Brethren church, Glanzer later transferred his ordination to the Evangelical Covenant Church. He has served as a youth pastor for a Presbyterian Church; as an associate pastor, pastor, and church planter of Mennonite Brethren churches; and as the founding pastor of Faith Community Church, an Evangelical Covenant fellowship formed in Houston in 1987.

Serve Day 2001

A report on the University’s third year of service to the community

A brief early-afternoon shower failed to dampen the spirits of George Fox employees and students as they labored all day in Christ’s name throughout the local community during the University’s third annual Serve Day Sept. 5.

A wide range of agencies throughout Yamhill County and parts of the Portland metropolitan area again benefited from the energies put forth by more than 1,500 people. Typical projects included painting, clearing of debris, weeding, litter pick-up, window washing, or spending time with residents at senior care homes.

The University ceased all normal activity for the day.

Brad Lau, vice president for student life, headed the Serve Day Committee that had planned the event since May. He said Serve Day “was a tremendous success because of the cumulative efforts of the George Fox community.”

“Newberg and the surrounding area has fewer weeds, cleaner parks, and residents at senior care homes. Typical projects included painting, clearing of debris, weeding, litter pick-up, window washing, or spending time with residents at senior care homes. The University ceased all normal activity for the day.”

Newberg and the surrounding area.

President David Brandt reminded the crowd there is a strong scriptural basis for Christian service. “If we go into this day with the attitude that Jesus asks us to go, it can be one of the most positive days of the year,” he said.

Serve Day participation was not limited to current students or employees. Four alumni were among those who volunteered to help. Representatives of a couple of businesses that work on an ongoing basis with the University also helped.

One was Tom Switzer, a sales representative for Michael’s Printing in Tigard, who volunteered and was assigned to work at Bethel Baptist Church in McMinnville, Ore. He said he was impressed by Serve Day and wanted to help. “I’ve always been involved in my community and church.” He said he offered to spend vacation time on Serve Day, but his bosses at the printing company gave him their blessing to devote a regular work day to it.

— John Fortmeyer

Three Honored for Contributions to George Fox

George Fox has given special recognition to three individuals for their contributions during the 2000-01 academic year.

In June, Beth Bagley of Newberg was named the University’s Volunteer of the Year. A 1949 George Fox graduate, Bagley began volunteering for her alma mater about the time she retired, in 1984, after 27 years as administrative secretary for Northwest Yearly Meeting of Friends Church.

“When she retired, Beth said, ‘I’m retiring now so that I can volunteer for things,’” recalled her sister-in-law, Betty Hockett. “That’s been her joy and delight.”

Bagley was cited for her work coordinating the volunteer mailing crew at George Fox, and for her help at Newberg Friends Church and Friendsview Manor retirement center. During the past academic year, she worked on a variety of tasks, from preparing publications for mailing to assisting with blood drives, construction projects, and gardening.

In August, George Fox honored Jennifer Swabnorough as Administrative Staff Member of the Year and Dwayne Astleford as Support Staff Member of the Year.

Swanborough, GFU’s associate director of undergraduate admissions, joined the George Fox graduate and joined the admission staff upon graduating, initially working as visit coordinator.

Swanborough was cited for her organizational ability that allows her to take ideas and develop them into reality. When students initiated the idea of a serve program, she planned and incorporated a half-day service project into orientation. The project was later expanded to become the University’s annual Serve Day. She also developed the summer registration of new students into the successful program known as Genesis.

Those who nominated her wrote of her integrity, Christlike attitude, friendliness, and competence.

Astleford joined Plant Services as a custodial supervisor in 1996, and four years later was promoted to senior custodial supervisor. A graduate of Newberg High School, he attended Barclay College in Kansas.

Astleford is “consistently cheerful and accommodating, no matter how arduous the task,” said one colleague in nominating him. Others cited his excellent work ethic, pleasant attitude, and “sense of humor that never seems to fail him.”

— John Fortmeyer
A $23.5 Million Success
The three-year Legacy Campaign draws to a close

Donors and friends of the George Fox University community celebrated the success of the Legacy Campaign at the same time they dedicated the Stevens Center. It seemed fitting, given that the Stevens Center is such a prominent and tangible outcome of the campaign.

Following the dedication ceremony and an open house, the Stevens Center was closed except to invited guests. For the next three hours, approximately 230 campaign donors and volunteers feasted on a buffet dinner, toured the building’s classrooms and offices, and participated in a program celebrating a fund-raising campaign that to date has raised $23.5 million for the University.

The success of the Legacy Campaign is particularly notable, says Vice President for University Advancement Dana Miller, given that it was launched during a transition in presidents. Former President Edward F. Stevens, for whom the Stevens Center is named, succumbed to cancer during the early stages of the campaign, and his successor, David Brandt, had been president for just a year when fund-raising efforts were publicly launched.

The evening’s program, Miller says, reflected on “the way the Lord revealed his faithfulness through many major donors early on in the campaign to signal this was indeed the right time and the right set of priorities for the campaign.”

André Iseli, the board of trustee member who served as one of the co-chairs for the Legacy Campaign, spoke on behalf of the Steering Committee. His comments reflected his passion for George Fox University, its leadership, and the Christ-centered education it offers.

Volunteers were honored, including Barbara Palmer, board member and Steering Committee co-chair; Harold Ankeny, who organized prayer sessions for the campaign; and Hank and Jo Helsabeck, who chaired the faculty/staff campaign. Also recognized were John and Marilyn Duke and Mark and Antoinette Hatfield, who served as honorary co-chairs, and Keith Galitz, Dale Hadley, and Paul Hathaway Jr., other members of the Legacy Campaign Steering Committee.

Stevens Center Dedicated
Honoring the man for whom it was named, the George Fox community gathered to officially open the new campus cornerstone

“The final test of a leader is that he leaves behind in other people the conviction and the will to carry on. “Thank you for carrying on the Lord’s work at George Fox University that Ed (Stevens) dedicated his life to.”

With those words, quoting first from church growth leader John Maxwell, then her own, Linda Stevens on Sept. 20 helped dedicate the new Edwards F. Stevens Center.

Speaking on behalf of the Stevens family, the University’s former first lady officially responded to the naming of the new three-story, $7 million building in honor of her late husband, who was president of George Fox for 15 years until 1998.

The late-afternoon public ceremony on the north plaza of the new 41,000-square-foot building featured both off- and on-campus leaders involved with the University. Each briefly addressed the audience prior to the formal dedication statement by President David Brandt.

Here’s a sampling of their comments:
- Bill Wilson, vice chair, board of trustees: “It’s an incredible building ... It’s about a man called by God, Ed Stevens, who always put God first, above all things. Did Ed succeed in his dream for George Fox University? The answer has to be an unqualified yes. May God now bless this building, and the students and staff who use it.”
- Tom Pene, partner with BOORA Architects: “Today really represents a conclusion of a labor of love. Today, our child, as it were,

see Dedication, page 2
becomes a part of this fine university.”
• Jeff Kirksey, student government president: “I want to thank the faculty, staff, administration, board of trustees, and donors for committing this university to our Lord Jesus Christ. Now we can see how those committed plans have resulted in success … because they were committed to God.”
• Charles Cox, mayor of Newberg: “This is a fitting tribute to one of Newberg’s finest citizens.”
• Andrea Cook, vice president for enrollment services and chair of the building planning committee: “I think Ed would have been pleased with this building, and the realization of his dream.”
• John Duke, who with his wife, Marilyn, was a major door to the building campaign: “The Stevens Center represents the continued growth of George Fox for the future. Thank God that Ed Stevens was God’s man to lead George Fox during a critical time in its development.”

To formally dedicate the new student services center, the audience was led in the reading of the dedication prayer by Barbara Palmer, a member of the board of trustees and co-chair of the Legacy Campaign Steering Committee, which raised funds for the building.

Brandt and Linda Stevens, in front of an arch of blue and silver balloons, then unveiled a memorial plaque to the University’s 10th president. Using ribbon-covered ceremonial scissors, Linda Stevens cut the blue ribbon opening the new center that features an exterior of brick highlighted with cedar.

An open house, with self-guided tours, allowed the public to visit the center, which incorporates natural light through its large, central three-story atrium. An invitational dinner for about 250 donors and friends of the University followed.

Contained within the building are six classrooms (two of them “smart” classrooms with the latest in technology equipment) and the University’s institutional technology center, along with student-orientation and multicultural services. More than 100 employees are housed in the building.

The building was constructed over a 14-month period and opened in late August for the start of fall semester classes. The center was designed by BOORA Architects Inc., of Portland. Contractor was Robert Gray Partners Inc., of Sherwood.

From top: Linda Stevens, Ed’s daughters, siblings, and their spouses attended the dedication of the Stevens Center.

Legacy Campaign donors John and Marilyn Duke, for whom the atrium of the Stevens Center is named, share their memories of Ed.

Those attending the Legacy Campaign celebration filled the atrium of the Stevens Center for a dinner followed by a program featuring remarks by President Brandt and other campaign leaders.

Ezra and Hanni Koch and their grandson Eric Costa, a GFU graduate (far left), visit with planned giving director Todd Newell (second from left) and undergraduate admission director Dale Seilges (far right) outside the admission welcome center the Koches helped fund.

Legacy Campaign donors John and Marilyn Duke, for whom the atrium of the Stevens Center is named, share their memories of Ed.
One-Stop Service

The Stevens Center fulfills the dream of having a comprehensive student service center

“It’s pretty spiffy,” says sophomore Rose Passione as she stands in the atrium of the new Edward F. Stevens Center.

Passione, a music major from Springfield, Ore., was in George Fox University’s newest building to transact business — applying her Work-Study funds to her tuition account.

The process was perhaps a little less painful because of the impressive surroundings. At least, it was faster.

“It really adds a lot to the campus,” Passione says of the three-story, 41,000-square-foot center opened this fall. She also notes that the building was doing what was promised: providing more efficiency and ease for students. “It was faster,” says Passione, who noted the center seems more spacious and less crowded.

Echoing a reaction that would please building planners, Katrina Russell, a senior international studies major from Seattle, says, “It’s nice to have everything in one building.

“I like it. I like the openness, but sometimes all the space seems a little odd.” She contrasts it to her experience of spending spring semester in Costa Rica with the Latin America Studies Center, experiencing small living quarters and smaller buildings.

“Everything is so open,” she says. “You wonder about bothering others with your conversation.”

Those who work in the building also comment on the open floor plan. Carolyn Stansell, a records clerk in the financial aid office and a 1966 George Fox graduate, has work space on the first floor. The building has 112 work spaces, with just 20 as enclosed offices.

“I have a whole bunch more space,” says Stansell, who adds that it’s taking time to adjust to the new work surroundings. Among the changes is the increased activity around her as students come and go to take care of business with the University.

She says the traffic sometimes makes it a bit harder to concentrate, but she emphasizes how much better the new one-stop service center is for students.

“They say they like all of the stops (offices) being so accessible and so close by.”

Cindy Howard agrees. A records specialist and off-campus study coordinator in the registrar’s office, she is housed in the open work space closest to the building’s main entrance. As a result, she is perhaps the person most students contact first when looking for service.

“They are somewhat confused by where to go,” she says, “so they approach me to find out.” She then refers them to the appropriate student service area located in the building: registrar, financial aid, student accounts, student life, residence life, campus ministries, career services, multicultural services, and admission.

Howard, a 1999 graduate, says she feels more connected with other offices with the new open arrangement and compact location of areas serving students.

Susan Hampton, who is located at another of the workstations that catches a lot of student traffic, also prases the centralization of services. “The biggest benefit to students is everything is just right here — it’s all in this building,” she says.

Hampton, a student accounts representative and a 1980 GFU graduate, reports an increase in the amount of student traffic in her area and relates it to convenience: students can drop by as they go to or leave a class scheduled in the building.

Student life administrative secretary Shelley Tapia, on the other hand, senses business in her area is slower. But that, she says, may be because — with the sheer size of the building — the volume of students is perceived to be less, compared to her formerly cramped location in an interior space in Wood-Mar Hall.

Like many others, Tapia, a 1998 seminary major from a 1998 seminary major from Seattle, says, “It’s nice to have everything in one building.

“I love to watch the interaction” is the observation of Dale Scipp, executive director of admission and financial aid, about the Stevens Center. It’s easier for prospective students and their parents to see and meet current students during their visits to campus due to his office’s location in a building that houses classrooms and other offices.

“This is so nice,” he says of his new surroundings. “It’s a very professional environment.”

— Barry Hubbell
“Green Building” Certified

An innovative design wins the Stevens Center awards as an environmentally friendly building

Designed with an emphasis on environmental responsibility, George Fox University’s new Edward F. Stevens Center is gaining regional attention and recognition.

A key to the design of the building was concern for the environment, with the center designated as a “green” building because it emphasizes energy efficiency, simple materials and finishes, healthy indoor air, natural light, and conservation of resources during its construction.

The Stevens Center was one of 10 projects selected for a Ten Shades of Green exhibition in September 2001 showcasing architectural projects in the Pacific Northwest that “exemplify the latest and best in sustainable practices and technologies.”

Cosponsored by the City of Portland Office of Sustainable Development and the Portland Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, the exhibit was part of the Architectural League of New York’s acclaimed Ten Shades of Green exhibition at the Ecotrust’s Natural Capital Center in Portland.

Because of its design and strict adherence to being environmentally friendly and efficient, the Stevens Center also has earned “Green Building” certification by Portland General Electric as part of its Earth Advantage program. To qualify, the building was required to provide at least 22 percent savings over state of Oregon code.

The Stevens Center incorporates natural daylighting through its large, central three-story atrium. Operable windows provide natural ventilation. Low-velocity fans deliver moderate-temperature air to the occupant zones directly, lowering energy use and costs. The building features a raised floor system: 15 inches between the floor and the structural frame. This design allows for mechanical systems, resulting in more flexibility in relocation of office spaces in the future.

Construction included significant recycling of materials and products. For example, eight houses that formerly occupied the site were moved to new locations, or deconstructed and the materials reused in the Stevens Center. Asphalt on the former streets was recycled, and the sidewalks and curb concrete was recycled on-site and used as aggregate in either the parking lot base, foundation, or pipe fill.

The structural frame of the building is concrete tilt-up beams much larger than most site-cast pieces. Each of the 14 pieces of the frame measures 40 by 60 feet and was cast on the ground, then erected one after the other — similar to an old-fashioned “barn raising” — exposing a three-story frame prior to any of the floors being put in place.

— Barry Hubbell

Top: The concrete framework for the building visible from the inside plays a role in the Stevens Center’s energy efficiency. In hot weather the building is flushed with cool outside air at night. The concrete pillars then absorb heat during the day, helping to keep the Stevens Center cool.

Middle: The admission area on the second floor features a welcome center for prospective students and their families.

Bottom: The atrium’s skylight helps spread natural light throughout the interior of the building.
“God: Students wrestle with God’s role in tragedy (continued from page 1)

“We don’t talk about it often enough — eternity.”
David Leonard is a 32-year-old assistant pastor with New Life Foursquare Church in Stayton. He is also training to be a military chaplain. He talked about the Rev. Michael Judge, a fire department chaplain who was killed at the World Trade Center.

“I remember thinking, ‘That’s my job’ The kind of help that God said Christ would give people a chance to vent.

“But we move them into a place of forgiveness. Christ got angry, but at no point did he wound other people,” she said.

“In your anger, do not sin,” added Simmons.

Although most of the first half of the three-hour class felt tense, students bemoaned talking about the stories of renewed patriotism or people’s eagerness to come out of their shells could only lead to more hatred. Others were not sure.

“We have to ask God, ‘What is the right direction, where should we go?’” said Ken McBride.

The student said, “If there was no God, I’m sure we’d be talking more about how evil it could be.”

Katherine Dawes, a pastor in training in Newberg, was in New York City Sept. 18-25, providing counseling services as part of a group arranged by Portland-based Northwest Medical Teams International. Also in that team were Dean Harry, who holds a master’s degree in counseling from GFU (’97), and Ron Hays, a member of the class of 1974, who is an emergency medical technician living in Scotts Mills. He assessed the need for trauma counseling among New York City’s rescue workers and firefighters.

Jordan joined the George Fox faculty this year. Previously, she was at the University of Colorado-Denver. There she worked with grieving families of Oklahoma City bombing victims during the trial of Timothy McVeigh. She also counseled families involved in the deadly shootings at Columbine High School.

In New York, Jordan ministered to firefighters. An accompanying reporter with The Oregonian interviewed her on assignment.

“You think about it,” Jordan said.

“They have been working here for days. To think they haven’t been impacted doesn’t make sense. You see it in their facial expressions. You can see it looking in their eyes.”

— Karin Jordan, director of George Fox’s graduate program in counseling, on ministering to New York firefighters

“Research, writing, service focus of sabbaticals even George Fox University faculty members are on sabbatical for all or a portion of the 2001-02 academic year, working on various projects and special studies.

S

History professor Kelly Ireland is writing a comprehensive biography on Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th president of the United States. The book will be designed to appeal to both academic and general readership.

Social work professor Sherrie Schubert is conducting research on the social and psychological adaptation of childhood cancer survivors. Her analysis will identify factors that promote resiliency and coping strategies among the survivors.

Education professor Grace Balwit is spending the time in the classroom at local schools as a substitute teacher or volunteer to reacquaint herself with the current demands of the teaching profession.

Balwit also will continue her research on the effects of repeated readings of verse on oral fluency in nonrhythmic texts. She plans to present her research at the American Reading Forum in December.

Larry Shelton, a George Fox Evangelical Seminary theology professor, is addressing the theological subject of atonement as it relates to 21st-century life.

Chemistry professor Royal Chrabalorian will spend the spring semester at Daystar University, a Christian university in Nairobi, Kenya, where he will develop a proposal for a chemistry major and teach general science courses.

Communications professor Craig J. lolston will spend his sabbatical as an intern to deepen his understanding of leadership development and communication training in the corporate sector.

Seminary professor MaryKate Horse will turn her dissertation, “The Relationship of Transformational Leadership. Illustrated by the Historical Jesus,” into a book to be titled Jesus: Leading for Change Throughout the Ages.

“Response: George Fox counselors reach out to hurting public (continued from page 1)

uled prayers times also were set in the auditorium, at noon with Lamm leading, and from 4 to 4:30 p.m. with religion professor Paul Anderson leading.

Classes were held as scheduled, but with no one expecting it to be business as usual inside the classroom. George Fox President David Brandt posted an e-mail his decision to hold classes, saying, “Most of us are in a class relatively short part of the day, and I would encourage prayer whenever possible. We have asked instructors to take time for prayer in each class, and there will be periods of prayer through the day.” He added: “I encourage us to take an attitude of prayer with us wherever we are.”

Wednesday’s regularly scheduled chapel program was quickly changed to one devoted entirely to prayer for the nation and world, with employees joining students.

When U.S. President George W. Bush called for a National Day of Prayer and Remembrance to be held at noon on Friday (Sept. 14), Brandt had all University offices closed and classes canceled from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Expectations were high for the day.

In an electronic message to alumni worldwide, President Brandt wrote: “I hope the George Fox University community will come together as a family and a light in our dark world. At the Wednesday chapel service, I suggested that we remember the words recorded in John’s Gospel, chapter 1. ‘The Light blazed out of the darkness; the darkness couldn’t put it out (John 1:5, The Message).’ We know this light and have the obligation to spread the Light blazed out of the darkness.”

George Fox faculty, staff, and alumni have, indeed, being sharing their lives with those in need, both locally and near “Ground Zero” of the Sept. 11 attack.

Karin Jordan, director of George Fox’s graduate program in counseling, was among New York City’s rescue workers and firefighters. She counseled families involved in the deadly shootings at Columbine High School.

In New York, Jordan ministered to firefighters. An accompanying reporter with The Oregonian interviewed her on assignment.

“You think about it,” Jordan said.

“They have been working here for days. To think they haven’t been impacted doesn’t make sense. You can see it looking in their eyes.”

— Anita Mather, assistant professor of marriage and family therapy, followed Jordan’s steps to New York the following week, part of a separate team organized by the American Red Cross.

Bill Eissig, assistant professor of business and economics, helped arrange a counseling service at two locations in the Portland area. Within hours of the attack, he contacted Brandt to inquire about the possibility of interested and qualified George Fox personnel assisting in the effort. Brandt readily agreed and shared the opportunity with employees that day.

One of those helping was Charlie Kamulos, a librarian on the Newberg campus. He is a former pastor who specialized in crisis intervention counseling when he was in seminary. He spent two days at one of the mobile units at Pioneer Courthouse Square in downtown Portland.

Kamulos counseled about two dozen people over two days. He was able to assist people from a wide range of faith backgrounds — including Jewish and Catholic as well as Protestant — and on occasion was able to offer a prayer or a hug to those who desired it.

Also helping with the counseling were Charity Benham, a Newberg student in George Fox’s doctoral program in psychology. She counseled from a mobile unit at Washington Square mall in Tigard.

Two George Fox alumni, Sue McDowell of Lafayette, Ore., and Charles Combs of Lake Oswego, Ore., also volunteered as counselors at the Portland site. Combs has a doctorate in psychology (’94), and McDowell holds master’s degrees in both marriage and family therapy and counseling psychology (’99).

Even though geographically far from the attacks, many Oregonsians seemed to move the counsel. Mather said, “I had a lot of people tell me ‘Thank you for being here, because we need you, too.’”

“The distance from coast to coast got very small with this happening.”

— Barry Hubbard
On-campus housing policy undergoes changes

With few exceptions, all full-time undergraduate students at George Fox now have the option to live on campus until their senior year. This fall, however, that requirement has changed with the addition of a housing exemption policy called the Community Living Option (CLO), based not on a student’s class year but on the number of academic credit hours the student has completed. “The policy rewards academic performance, which helps retention,” says Brad Lau, the University’s vice provost. “It also should prevent overcrowding. George Fox University housing choices range from residence halls to suites to apartments to houses. ‘The variety of housing we provide is very unique,’ says Mark Pothoff, associate dean of students. ‘It’s rare to see a campus with such diverse housing, for as small a college as we are.’ “Such variety benefits students but makes the task of assigning housing more difficult, especially when seniors were deciding late in the summer to live off campus. Now that those decisions must be made before the end of spring semester, Pothoff and his staff will have a better idea of what housing is available for new students. And since the new policy will create, in essence, a running list of those who want to live off campus, the student life office will be able to go to that list if they need to make room for a bigger incoming freshman class.

“Our hope is to never be in a situation where we have three students to a room or students staying temporarily in lobbies,” Pothoff says. “It’s important that we make sure that we have a good variety of housing options available for our students. And it’s important that we are able to create a community that is safe and secure.”

The new policy requires students to apply to live off campus, and if granted a CLO, to accept it by early April. The credits needed to live off campus would vary from year to year depending on the number of returning students and incoming freshmen expected each fall. As a result, the new residency requirement means there is the potential for some students who are juniors to live off campus. While the new policy may be attractive to students for that reason, for George Fox administrators it has benefits that are university-wide. Because permission to live off campus is granted to those with the most credit hours, the policy rewards academic persistence, which helps retention.

While that may be true, the policy may alter the way upperclassmen are assigned housing. “The variety of housing we provide is very unique,” says Mark Pothoff, associate dean of students. “It’s rare to see a campus with such diverse housing, for as small a college as we are.”

The learning that takes place through residence life involves such basic life skills as getting along with others and appreciating personal differences. When are you right in the thick of every-thing. In residence life, Pothoff says, “you’re constantly in the learning process, whether that be learning about yourself or learning about other people. And let’s just face it. It’s fun to live in the dorms. You just walk down the hall and you hear lots of people having a great time.”

The impact of college friendships is evident in Pothoff’s life. Of seven friends who attended George Fox together, six had a George Fox education. “It’s a great experience to be near the center of campus, especially being a freshman,” Wilkinson says about living in Pennington Hall. “People were always going in and out — it was a real-ly active dorm — so I got to know a lot of students.”

“It’s an advantage to live in community with many people who have a variety of interests, he says. “It’s just a great opportu-nity to figure out more of who you are by doing different activities with different people.”

Mark Pothoff, associate dean of students, can relate to Wilkinson’s experience. He changed in the same ways while a student at George Fox.

“I loved the on-campus experience,” he says. “There’s so much more to col-lage when you’re right in the thick of everything.”
Eric (G85) and Debbie (Smitherman) (n86) Hagen live in the United Kingdom, where he is the European field controller for Terex, and she is a teacher.

Kathy Winters (G85) received a master of science degree in personnel and human resources management from American University, Washington, D.C., on May 13.

She works for law firm of Latzer, Metzger & Milkman in Washington, D.C.

Greg Allen (G89) is assistant professor of computer networking and server administration for the Portland Lighthouse.

Robert Yarldie (DFPS99) has been named vice president and Oregon regional manager for The Alford Group, a not-for-pro- fit consulting firm headquartered in Chica- go, Ill., with an office in Portland.

Ruben Montenegro (DFPS98) is an inde- pendent sales associate for AFAC Lor- Co, Portland/Vancouver.

Raymond Cheung (G96) is a senior audit- ant in the assurance and business advisory services department at Pricewaterhouse- Coopers, Portland.

Tom Heuberger (G96) is a math teacher at Hood River (Ore.) High School.

Liz (Huffman) Hoffman (G96) is career ser- vices assistant at Nyack College, Nyack, N.Y.

Coryne Horch (G96) is account execu- tive for WKJ3 Radio, Portland.

Jennifer (jorgen) McConnell (G96) graduated in May from Multnomah Bible College in Portland. She and her husband, Matthew, live in Twin Falls, Idaho, where she teaches fifth grade at Oakridge Elementary School.

Robert Gebhardt jr. (MBAJ97) is a member of the Keizer (Ore.) budget com- mittee, which reports to the city council.

Jenni Simon Sommer (G96) is executive secretary at the Idaho State Board of Education, Boise, Idaho.

Caleb Williams (G97) is an attorney for the firm Saalfield, Griggs, Griggs, Alexander & Emrick in Salem, Ore.

Stacy Parcher (G98) received a master’s degree in nutrition from Arizona State University in May, and currently works at reg- istered dietitian for Fresenius Medical Center, Tempe, Ariz.

Lynsey (Shontz) Turek (G98) is CEO of Oregon Nature Discovery, a company selling a complete line of biologically and exact wildlife identification prints sold in museums, aquariums, galleries, and gift shops.

Kara (Fouts) Williams (G98) received a master of arts in teaching from George Fox in May. She is teaching second grade at Kennedy Elementary School, Keizer, Ore.

Anna McInturf (G99) received a master’s degree in organic chemistry from Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. She has been accepted as a candidate in the Ph.D. pro- gram for organic chemistry at Cornell.

Tarah Walberg (G99) is account execu- tive for the Microsoft/MSN account at Waggoner Enterprises Strategic Communi- cations.

Seth Himes (G00) is the founder of Highwater Productions, a film company in Vancouver, Wash. He has pro- duced the film Refining Daniel, which is being used as a fund raiser for Royal Family Kids Camp, a nonprofit ministry for abused, neglected, and abandoned children.

Joe Notter (G00) is a performance engi- neer for AT&T Wireless, Seattle.

Paul Nagle (G32) and Elizabeth Thomp- son, Sept. 2, 2000, in Farmington Hills, Mich.

Heather Taggart (G94) and Joel Gar- vaglia-Masaroni, May 19, 2001, in Sali- den, Calif.

Lori Mills (G96) and Derric Thune, May 19, 2001, in Portland.

Kevin Zuicher (n97) and Barbara Brewer (G00), Aug. 19, 2000, in Tigard, Ore.

Stephanie Bates (G98) and Nathan Gross (G99), June 30, 2000, in Hood River, Ore.

Connie Gettman (G98) and Adam Kohl (G90), Aug. 10, 2000, in Newberg.

Tim Hansh (G98) and Jennifer Curtis, Aug. 19, 2000, in Corvallis, Ore.

Krist Holleman (G98) and Jason Helbig, Dec. 16, 2000, in Boring, Ore.

Josh Cogar (G99) and Julie Jastram, June 23, 2001, in Tualatin, Ore.

Rachel Powell (G99) and Tony Brandt, July 8, 2000, in Turner, Ore.

Sharon Barnett (G99) and Josh McPherson (G90), Sept. 1, 2000, in Wenatchee, Wash.

Elizabeth Bauman (G99) and Adam Collins (G90), Nov. 11, 2000, in Nevada City, Calif.

J anet DeYoung (G99) and Aaron Wright (G99), July 1, 2000, in Medford, Ore.

Lisa Melay (G99) and Paul Andrewies- ki (G01), June 2, 2000, in Portland.

Joe Notter (G99) and Kristine Miller, July 14, 2001, in Denver.

Thomas Payne (G99) and Leah Weare (G01), July 21, 2001, in Sandy, Ore.

Rich Brown (G01) and Davida Ankeny (student), July 7, 2001, in Sandy.

Erin Contreras (G01) and Sandor Gross- man, June 17, 2001, in Portland.

Janene Loren (G01) and Amy McCam- man (G01), June 16, 2001, in Boring, Ore.

Lisa Papulski (MAT01) and Andrew Boylan, June 2, 2001, in Beaverton, Ore.

Glenda Morgan (n03) and Shane Dun-away, Jan. 13, 2001, in Dallas, Ore.

Kelley (Grant) (G78) and Phil (G78) Marchant, a girl, Alyssa Sharon, April 5, 2001, in Chino Hills, Calif.

Sarah (Littlefield) (G78) and Leon (G76) Strait, a boy, Miguel Angel, born April 9, 1995, adopted May 26, 2000, in Salem, Ore.

Kelly (Stringer) (G79) and Jim Thomp- son, a boy, Jacob Michael Lev, April 26, 2001, in Tualatin, Ore.

Pamela (Inman) (G79) and Scott Robin- son, a boy, Isaac David, May 3, 2001, in Hillsboro, Ore.

Karen (Montiel) (G74) and Stephen Del- man, a boy, Jeddidah Walker, June 5, 2001, in Bend, Ore.

Sharon (Davis) (G74) and Kip McDow- ell, a boy, Jack Philip, April 30, 2001, in Kennewick, Wash.

Marge (McKnight) (G74) and Donnie Mont- agney, a boy, Jordan James, June 29, 2001, in Portland.

Valearie (Doakes) (G74) and Devon Pearce, a girl, Iman Re’Ann, Jan. 2, 2001, in Portland.

Cheri (Buiky) (G75) and Dean Bolton, two boys, Tyson Dean, born Aug. 30, 1989, and Tristan Dean, born June 11, 1996, adopted July 25, 2001, in Aloha, Ore.

Shannon (Garon) (G75) and Mark (G75) Hartley, a boy, Timothy Robert, Sept. 23, 2000, in Silverton, Ore.

Gennie (Sluder) (G76) and Bryan Harris, a girl, Courtney Elisey, Nov. 2, 2000, in Portland.

Colette (Kemmerer) (G76) and Matt Hudson, a girl, Asha Christine, March 24, 2001, in Urbana, Ill.

J ulie (Swanson) (G76) and Bill King, a girl, Courtney Dell, June 1, 2001, in Hillsboro, Ore.

Nathan (G79) and Angela (Dean) (G79) White, a girl, Brittany Nicole, Nov. 15, 2000, in Great Falls, Mont.

Marla (Reimer) (n79) and Billy Young, a boy, Lane Russell, Aug. 9, 2001, in Didsbury, Alberta, Canada.

Anna (Stone) (G80) and Ryan Smith, a boy, Samuel Peter, Feb. 22, 2001, in Tualatin, Ore.

Michael (GFES99) and Laura Hamilton, a boy, Ethan Michael, June 16, 2001, in McMinnville, Ore.

Melissa (DP01) and John Janssen, a boy, John Thomas, May 15, 2001, in Salem, Ore.
Upcoming Alumni Events

Alumni Abroad 2002
June 28–July 11
The George Fox University Office of Alumni and Parent Relations is pleased to announce a new, June Abroad-style study tour for George Fox alumni and friends.

• Twenty-five spaces are available for this 14-day tour to cities in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, and England.
• Due to limited space, your RSVP is required by November 26, 2001.

Save the date for Homecoming 2002

A Brand New “U”
February 15–17
Class Reunions
• 1980 (10-year)
• 1981 (10-year)
• 1982 (20-year)
• 1985 (20-year)
• 1987 (25-year)
Affinity Reunions
• Ministry Alumni
• Family Alumni
For all graduates of the Department of Religious Studies (Christian ministries, biblical studies, and religion majors), George Fox Evangelical Seminary (formerly Western Evangelical Seminary), and alumni who were active in campus ministry as students.

Homecoming has something for everyone, so plan to attend! Details to follow in the mail.

Christmas Party at the Pittock Mansion
President Dave and Melva Brandt cordially invite George Fox University friends and alumni to a traditional George Fox Christmas celebration in Portland.

Please plan to join us for an evening of holiday music, hors d’oeuvres, and desserts.
Monday, December 3, 2001
7:00 to 9:00 p.m.
The Pittock Mansion
3229 N.W. Pittock Drive
Portland, Oregon
$20 per person
Due to limited space, your RSVP is required by November 26, 2001. Tickets will be sent in the mail. RSVP 503-554-2211 or director@georgefox.edu.

Alumni Awards Revised

The annual awards for honored alumni change their colors, but not their luster

Marge Weesner, the 2001 Alumna of the Year, receives congratulations from George Fox President David Brandt.
The Alumni/Alumna of the Year award will be replaced by the Heritage Award, recognizing a lifetime of achievement academically, professionally, in community service, and in personal life.

“...There was some confusion, in the past, as to what distinguished the different categories,” she said. “We want to clarify things, as well as to add the category recognizing recent alumni.”

Candidates for the awards are gradu- admire by any George Fox University program, including those from the for- mer Western Evangelical Seminary, George Fox College, and Pacific Col- lege. Candidates are to reflect the ideals of the University in their commitment to their profession, church, community, and the University. They must have demonstrated support for, and sympathy with, the mission, goals, and purpose of the University.

Home: Residence life program contributes to student development

Home is a place where students connect with people, according to one George Fox alumni and friends that I met in college, living on campus, who are my best friends to this day and will be for the rest of my life.

Friendships such as those benefit the University as well as the student, says Cook. “Research shows that those students who live on campus and have the residential experience are much, much more likely to stay and complete their education because it’s part of their integration process. It’s part of how they connect.”

The campus community was one of the factors that Wilkinson looked for in selecting a college. He chose George Fox because of its active residence life program.

“We can offer other campuses, even Christian campuses,” Pothoff says, “and not have the same sense of community in their residential programs. I’ve been to visit a couple of other schools, and even just walking around, the feel of their residence halls is different.”

The reasons for that lie in the student life staff, he says. George Fox University hires people who are relational and stress- that in training. Three of the four full-time area coordinators (formerly known as resident directors) had previous resi- dence life experience, while the fourth was involved in an outdoor ministry.

“We place high priority and emphasis on relationships and knowing your resi- dents — connecting with people,” Pothoff says. “We train our staff: ‘You’re investing in people’s lives. This is a ministry.’”

Asking the four area coordinators 55 students who serve as assistant area coordinators, resident assistants, and house and apartment managers. Together they oversee more than 1,000 students in six residence halls, three

...so to what distinguished the different categories,” she said. “We want to clarify things, as well as to add the category recognizing recent alumni.”

Candidates for the awards are gradu- admire by any George Fox University program, including those from the for- mer Western Evangelical Seminary, George Fox College, and Pacific Col- lege. Candidates are to reflect the ideals of the University in their commitment to their profession, church, community, and the University. They must have demonstrated support for, and sympathy with, the mission, goals, and purpose of the University.

Home is a place where students connect with people, according to one George Fox alumnus.

“We can offer other campuses, even Christian campuses,” Pothoff says, “and not have the same sense of community in their residential programs. I’ve been to visit a couple of other schools, and even just walking around, the feel of their residence halls is different.”

The reasons for that lie in the student life staff, he says. George Fox University hires people who are relational and stress- that in training. Three of the four full-time area coordinators (formerly known as resident directors) had previous resi- dence life experience, while the fourth was involved in an outdoor ministry.

“We place high priority and emphasis on relationships and knowing your resi- dents — connecting with people,” Pothoff says. “We train our staff: ‘You’re investing in people’s lives. This is a ministry.’”

Asking the four area coordinators 55 students who serve as assistant area coordinators, resident assistants, and house and apartment managers. Together they oversee more than 1,000 students in six residence halls, three

...so to what distinguished the different categories,” she said. “We want to clarify things, as well as to add the category recognizing recent alumni.”

Candidates for the awards are gradu- admire by any George Fox University program, including those from the for- mer Western Evangelical Seminary, George Fox College, and Pacific Col- lege. Candidates are to reflect the ideals of the University in their commitment to their profession, church, community, and the University. They must have demonstrated support for, and sympathy with, the mission, goals, and purpose of the University.

Home is a place where students connect with people, according to one George Fox alumnus.

“We can offer other campuses, even Christian campuses,” Pothoff says, “and not have the same sense of community in their residential programs. I’ve been to visit a couple of other schools, and even just walking around, the feel of their residence halls is different.”

The reasons for that lie in the student life staff, he says. George Fox University hires people who are relational and stress- that in training. Three of the four full-time area coordinators (formerly known as resident directors) had previous resi- dence life experience, while the fourth was involved in an outdoor ministry.

“We place high priority and emphasis on relationships and knowing your resi-